Leadership Training and Forums

*Taking projects
from definition
to execution*

Background

More and more companies are coming to realize that skilled project leaders are not just a warranted investment, they're integral to success. That is why numerous clients have engaged PLS to increase the quality of project leadership within their organizations.

Solution

PLS training is customized to meet customer need. For example, PLS conducted a Project Leadership Forum in which they worked with the client to identify the key areas where their projects were failing, and then developed training modules around these topics. Once a month, all project managers and technical leaders met for a presentation and open dialogue on best practices.

Frequently, PLS works with an entire project team to define and plan their projects. This typically involves a presentation on a Project Leadership topic such as "Project Definition" and evolves into a working session to define a project that is currently in process. This method is especially effective because all team members are included in the training and there is a tangible outcome.

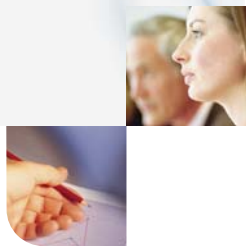

Results

By not only providing the tools, but also cultivating the unique collection of skills necessary for true project leadership, PLS has achieved across-the-board benefits ranging from improved efficiency and profitability to enhanced employee morale.
